This is more complete: The last paragraph in the question is pretty complete as it is. Field evaluation of an enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) for the detection of antibodies to Toxoplasma gondii in commercial swine. A commercial ELISA kit (Synbiotic Laboratories Inc., Calgary, AB, Canada) for the detection of antibodies to Toxoplasma gondii in swine sera is described. Antibodies to T. gondii were found in serum samples from pigs (85.5%) at various stages of production. At only one farm, antibodies were present in a large percentage of nursing piglets. This suggests a horizontal transmission of T. gondii to piglets at this site. There was no significant difference in the percentage of pigs positive for T. gondii antibodies between the commercial herds tested. A man was arrested and charged with multiple counts of first-degree murder after he allegedly killed at least eight people in a three-hour shooting spree in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, Wednesday. Authorities initially found three bodies, including two men shot inside a car and a third person, as they attempted to find the gunman. As their search continued, they discovered the bodies of two more people. The victims of the shootings range in age from 24 to 67. Officials identified the suspect as 52-year-old Marvin Barmette. He is in the Salisbury Detention Center and is being held without bond, according to a local news station. "As this is an active investigation, I will have no further comment at this time," Steve Jones, a spokesman for the Winston-Salem Police Department, said. It is the city's deadliest shooting in at least three decades. The incidents began when the suspect shot and killed the two men in the car, authorities said. They found the bodies of the two men when they approached the car to investigate. On his way to the scene, the gunman encountered two other victims — both women — and they were killed, as well. During his time on the run, the suspect shot a fourth person and chased a fifth victim with a handgun. After that, he fled to the house of a pastor who told him he would give him a place to stay, according to
